Research Activity

My research activities revolve around the verification of the efficacy, the safety, and the cost-effectiveness of non-pharmacological interventions (NPIs), as well as their impact on patient satisfaction. NPIs consist in exercise methods, physiotherapy programs, nutrition, disease management educational programs and psychotherapy interventions. Targeted populations are patients with chronic diseases (e.g., COPD, cancer, diabetes, depression) or persons at major risk for chronic diseases (e.g., risk of falling). I work on idiographic studies (quantified self) and clinical trials, as well as meta-analyses on this topic. I am also involved in the validation of self-reported questionnaires using psychometric standards. My research encompasses concepts such as chronic disease acceptance, quality of life, adherence, anxiety, depression, fatigue, self-esteem and their dynamics over time. The overarching purpose of these activities is to contribute to the improvement of rehabilitation programs and health prevention actions.
